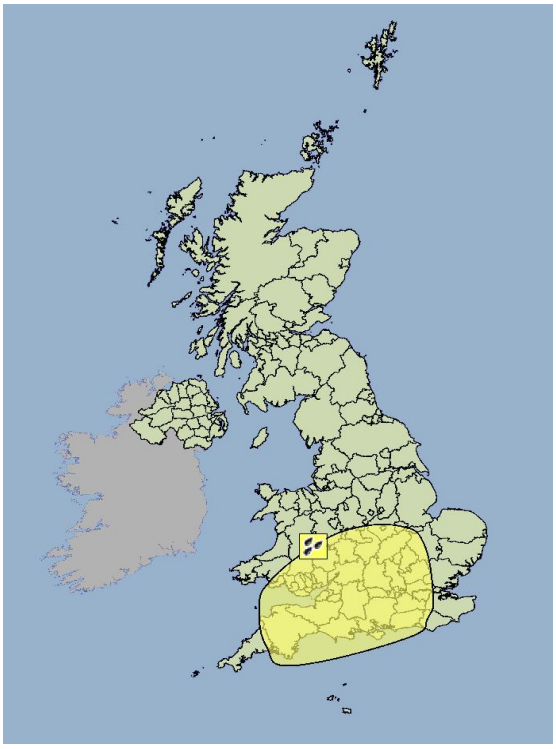
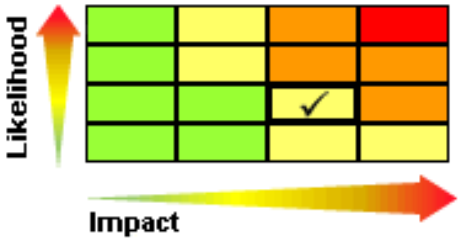
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The areas of rain, some heavy, across southern parts of England and Wales will turn more showery by afternoon, whilst at the same time heavy and possibly thundery showers develop. There is the potential for these to become slow moving in some places, most likely across the southwest Midlands, southeast Wales and and the West Country, leading to 15-25 mm of rain within an hour very locally, and perhaps 40 mm or more in a few hours. However, there is still some uncertainty over exactly where these will develop and most places will not experience these slow moving intense showers. Where they do occur, hail and lightning are also possible.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:00 on Wed, 11th May 2016 until 22:00 on Wed, 11th May 2016

Further heavy showers will occur across some central and southern parts of England and also southeastern parts of Wales. Some of these showers will become slow moving, with hail and thunder possible.

Be aware of the potential for localised surface water flooding and difficult driving conditions.
